Summary: After the events in Sunset, Hollyleaf is pinned under a boulder and has no means of going anywhere, that is, until a cat infamously known to the clans saves her. Instead of returning to the clans straight away, she decided to stick with this cat, and could she help him turn a new leaf? Adopted from OwenStarr. T because warriors

Turning a New Leaf

The Fall

WARNING* This story includes a crack ship AND a storyline not linear to the actual one! If you are easily offended by these said crack ships because they make no sense, or because they aren't your true OTP, please don't review and complain! If you are easily angered and are tempted to make a long review on how this didn't happen, just stop reading! If you continue to read, don't complain about this crack ship or the fact that this story has no connection to the main storyline, just remember, I'm a fanfictioner who writes stories for fun, not for anything but a smile on your face!

Well now that I got that here it is, the fanfic that I had adopted from Owenstarr, a fanfictioner and a friend. All I can say is please enjoy the ride that I have semi-planned for the all of us!

>On this moonlit night, the light breeze touched the leaves everso briskly, rustling them everso softly. The trees blocked the night sky, though the stars still shined brightly enough to see them through the foliage. All was silent and peaceful through Thunderclan camp.

But for her, this night would be anything but peaceful.

Her mind was whirling, only with her thoughts of what she had learned and done the past season. A cat that she trusted lying to her whole lifre. The ruthless murder of a cat that dared to spill their secret. The trouble of deciding to shed light to all about this secret. She wondered to herself how she didn't even _see _this sooner!

_The code was brokenâ€¦ and the result was me. _She thought to herself as she ran.

"Hollyleaf! Come back!" She could hear the cries of her kin, her brothers, wanting her to come back to them, so they could resolve things.

To her, this had the opposite effect, and caused her to run even faster, for she knew she could not face her brothers like this anymore. _I ignored the warrior code, the one thing I swore to protectâ€¦ _The air pushing on her black pelt as she ran. _I cannot deal with this any longerâ€¦ the crimes Ive commited, the blood I've spilledâ€¦_

She could smell the Windclan border getting closer, but she needed to first lose her brothers first if she wanted to get away.

"I think she went this way!" The concerned voice of one of her concerned brothers spoke.

She looked around, desperately looking for a way to escape. "Where to hide? Where to hide?" She repeated to herself.

"Stop running Hollyleaf!" She turned around to see the golden pelt of her brother, Lionblaze, appeared from the shadows.

A smaller grey pelt appeared as well, and the unseeing icy blue eyes of her other brother, Jayfeather, seemed to judge her the most. "Just come back with us Hollyeaf! We can resolve everything together."

"We can't resolve what has happened!" She growled with frustration. "Don't you get it?" She paused for a moment. _They have to know the truth about Ashfur. _She looked down now, knowing the truth would fill her brothers with shock and disappointment."I killed Ashfur!" Her voice was trembling. "I didn't do it to keep our birth a secret, or because he tried to kill usâ€¦ I did it because I was mad!" She could feel the tears welling up at her eyes. "I was mad that we were born from a broken code!"

"Everything can still be fixed Hollyleaf!" Lionblaze's cries were desperate. "Just don't goâ€¦"

There was silence for a moment for the standoff with her siblings.

"I'm sorry." She gave a light smile as her tears dripped off her face. She quickly bolted to the tunnels, the very same one which they had found those Windclan kits many seasons ago.

Whilst running into the tunnel, she lost her footing and began to tumble deeper into the tunnel, soon finding the earth move right behind her.

"Hollyleaf!" Was the last cry she heard before the rumbling sound of dirt and rocks engulfed her ears.

Silence soon engulfed her as she hit the cold hard ground. The darkness around her seemed to spin as her vision was unfocused and blurry. She attempted to get up, but her strength seemed to have been drained, and her legs screamed to stop moving. A light cough was let out as she settled back down, hoping to regain her strength.

_I'm away for nowâ€¦ might as well rest for the long journey ahead. _She closed her eyes, slowly lulling herself to a state of slumber.

Her sleep was peaceful, until she found herself on the surface.

"Where am I?" She thought aloud, seeing the trees and all. The suns rays above warmed her pelt up with a marvelous feeling. Green leaves began to fall down and she spotted one leaf gently falling down.

It was much different than all the leaves, in color it was orange, gently falling downwards. Hollyleaf herself was tempted to catch it, until it touched the suns ray. The leaf turned and turned green once again.

Shocked at this she saw the leaf gently touch the ground in front of her. She flipped it over now to see that this leaf was completely green.

"Impossible!" She looked at the leaf. Confused at this she looked at the sun, it getting brighter and brighter until it was basically blinding her. She closed her eyes, in an attempt to protect her eyes from the blinding lights.

She then jolted up, opening her eyes, to find herself in the darkness yet again, covered in dirt and cold, only hearing the wind quietly move through the tunnel.

_It was only a dream. _She sighed. Her muscles still ached, yet she couldn't help but realize something different. She tried to get up, and her leg lit up with pain. Moving her head, she now saw the problem. Her leg was pinned by a rock that had fallen on her when she tumbled down here.

"Just my luck!" She growled with frustration now. "My escape foiled by a rock." She got back down and rolled her eyes. "Just great."

All was silent for a moment, until she knew that just sitting here would not help.

"Anyone here?" She called out, voice echoing on the walls of this tunnel. "Some_thing _that can help meâ€¦ or put me out of my misery." She added under her breath.. Not to much surprise nothing came. "By Starclan, can't I just get a break!" She angrily looked at the roof of the tunnel, scratching the floor with frustration.

Taking a deep breath now, she began to calm herself down, collecting whatever peace of mind she had left. "This isn't helping... but I have nothing more to do but wait." She laid back down, secretly hoping something would come to her aid.

She had dozed off and slept once again, as there was noting much she could do about her situation, remembering all the events that led up to this, her being pinned under a boulder. Her eyes still closed as she could feel rock still on her leg.

"When will this be over?" She mumbled to herself.

All of a sudden she heard a chuckle.

Her eyes flung open and attempted to get into a defensive position, but soon remembered her current situation. The cat who stood before her seemed so familiar. A bright tortoiseshell white cat mixed with ginger and black sat confidently in front of her, this cat's puffy tail. This cat seemed to be licking his paw.

"Well hello there." This cat's somewhat deep voice said slyly. His yellow eyes seemed to be focused on the boulder, which pinned her to the ground. "It seems that you have gotten yourself in a terrible situation."

It was Sol.

>Well there you have it! The first chapter, and i hope this will be the first of many!

Be sure to check out a user named "Okulus", hes a good friend of mine, and I can say that his story, "Cries of the Silent", a new favorite of mine, has the potential to be an amazing fanfiction with our support!

Question of the Day: What do you think of this Ship (HollyXSol)

I personally feel strange, considering age difference, but both considered themselves the victim in respective clans (SPOLIER AHEAD) like how Sol believed he was betrayed by Leafstar when he was not made a "sky warrior", and Hollyleaf when she found out she was not the cat who she was raised to believe.

Well that is all!

Talon is out!
